Thirteen Killed in the Disaster at Cold Springs Grove.

The List of Those Injured Numbers Mearly Fifty.

An Inspection of the Republic Might Have Prevented This.

In Use Thirty Years and Some of the Deck Timbers Rotten.

The horrible accident which befell the excursion party from Theodore Kayser's big Brooklyn dry-goods store at Cold Spring rove on the Sound yesterday afternoon has thrown Williamsburg into mourning.

At least ten families number some of their members among the victims of the disaster, and outside of the list of dead there are probably from forty to fifty others who were more

NOT REPAIRED IN FOUR YEARS.

"He is supposed to know just what is needed, and he has carte blanche to do anything he likes in the way of repairs."

Since her overhauling early in the Spring, when she was found perfectly sound, according to Mr. Gwyer, the Republic has needed repairs amounting to only $4.30. This covered a period of three months, the bill being presented in June. The bill was principally for nalls and screws. shock.

Many others who were slightly injured were taken to their homes by their triends when they reached Brooklyn and the police did not yet their names.

As soon as the dead and injured had been extricated from the mass of broken timbers which had been crushed down upon the upper deck of the barge, efforts were made to get the remainder of the party back to their homes in Brooklyn.

"We our chased the Republic from the Briggs Excursion Company about four years ago, continued Mr. Gwyer, "I don't know how old she was then, but suppose she is twenty-six or thirty years old."

"Have the deck supports ever been replaced by new ones?" was asked.

"I don't know, I'm sure."

"Have they been replaced or repaired since the barge came into your company's possession?" George Paters, one of the Committee of Arrangements, tried to induce the Long Island Railroad officials to come to the assistance of the atranded excursionists. They would not take the people on board without a guarantee from the Excursion Company. After much delay about three hundred of the excursionists were brought back to Brooklyn by rail, and reached the Bushwick avenue station at 8.30. The remainder of the party came back to Brooklyn on the Crystal Stream, which also conveyed the dead bodies of the victims of the disaster. They reached the dock at South Fifth street about 10 o'clock last night.

The bodies were removed to the Fifth Precinct Police Station, and early this morning they were all taken charge of by friends or relatives, except that of the unknown girl, which was sent to Undertaker Nolan's.

A number of people have examined the broken timbers of the barge Republic, and the universal testimony is that they were rotten and unsafe.

On many doors were hung the badges of mourning, and on not a few of them the plain white slik rosette and streamers showed that it was a little child who was dead.

In front of every one of these houses a large crowd of sympathetic neighbors had gathered to offer what assistance they could to the bereaved families.

The excursionists started off yesterday morning at 10.30 from the foot of South Fifth street, Williamsburg, a jolly crowd of merrymakers.

The outing had been arranged by the employees of Theodore Kayser's dry-goods store at 197 Graham avenue, and they had charated that the not of the employees of the employees of the control of the street was any truth in the report that several excursionists had failen overboard and were drowned.

The employees in Kayser's only numbered a few more than a score, but they had induced all their friends and neighbors to go in with them, and there were between four and five hundred of the excursionists.

The majority of them were Germans, and many of them took their wives and little ones. A happy day was spent rambling among the woods, bathing and dancing, and the fun was at its height when the thunder storm, which came up about 3.30 o'clock, drove the people back to the barge.

They had hardly settled themselves aboard the boat, when the storm broke in all its fury.

A SCENE OF TERROR AND DEATH.

Most of the women and children had congregated on the dancing deck, behind the awhing, to keep out of the driving rain.

When the hurricane swept over the barge it burst in the awhings, raised the roof of the deck from its fastenings, snapping the wooden supports like pipe-stems and letting the roof down with a crash upon the heads of the women and children below.

Amelman was caught in Jamaica early this morning. Part of the money he obtained from Mrs. Neimeyer was found upon his person, the rest of it having been spent for drink. Scratches upon the negro's face, neck and handa teil how resolutely Mrs. Netmeyer bataged to escape at all is a miracle, considering the size and strength of her assailant. The prisoner refuses to talk, and so far has not confessed his guilt. His guards, however, say that he cowers in a corner of his cell in abject terror, and that he has begged them to protect him from mob violence. Mrs. Neimeyer was assaulted by Amelman last Monday afternoon. She and her husband live about two miles from Great Neck in the country house of Miss Whitmore, who is at present stopping at Kingsbridge. Monday afternoon Mrs. Nelmeyer started road to Bayside leads through a lonely strip of woods.

It was in this patch of timber that Mrs. Neimeyer inet Amelman, who was generally leared by the women of the neighborhood because of an assault upon a young girl made by him years before and for which he served a term in prison.

She attempted to pass Amelman, but the negro planted himself directly in her path, and drawing a knife, demanded her money. Mrs. Neimeyer threw him a silver dollar, and then he selzed her about the waist and drawing a thirty demanded in the road. Here he threatened to cut her throat if she made any outcry.

Outcry.

Then began a struggle which lasted over an hour, and in which both were exhausted.

Mrs. Neimeyer however successfully resisting the negro; selforts to overpower her. Finally she broke away from him, and, throwing down her purse, ran back over the road towards the Whitmore house.

Am liman stopped to ptek up the purse, and while he was examining it Mrs. Neimeyer made good her escape. During their struggle the negro had threatened to fill: her, saying she would be sure to send officers after him. Mrs. Neimeyer begyed him not to hurt her, and said if he would let her go she would hever tell what had happened.

Mrs. Neimeyer ran all the way to the house of Jacob Schollenberger, where she fell in a faint just as also entered the door. Her clothing was torn in shreds. When she recovered audiciently to tell her story Mr. Schollenberger spread the alarm and a posse was organized to hunt down the negro.

Constable Neimeyer Joined in the hunt upon his return, and had this posso overtaken the negro he would now, it is thought, be hausing from a tree in the woods where the also sault was committed.

There is a great deal of feeling hore against the prisoner, and it is by no means certain that he will be allowed to live long enough to stand trial.

Mrs. Neimeyer identified the prisoner as her assailant to-day and he was remanded for tital by Justice Morrill. Who ordered him to
